Upper canopy view of the El Boalar mixed pine-oak (Pinus sylvestris, Quercus subpyrenaica) forest, near Jaca in the Spanish Pyrenees. Studying this ecosystem, Martín-Gómez et al. (this issue, 1478-1492) identified a number of physiological traits that give marcescent oaks a significant advantage over pine in surviving droughts that are increasing in severity. These findings provide early warning tools to anticipate the risk of decline of Scots pine in the Mediterranean-Eurosiberian transition in Southern Europe. Photo: Miguel Ángel Lázaro.
